

I was concerned to hear about Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to require their stations to drop programming and air an anti-Kerry documentary days prior to the election. This is a clear example of the risks of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. This is for their private interest, and it is wrong.

When large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
